I saw capitalists strip farmers of water—and eventually of land. I saw them transform our city into a machine fueled by people's crushed spirits, broken dreams and emptied pockets. Corporations have long controlled our lives, taken lots, and now they're after our soul. This war is a people's war against a system that's spiraled out of our control. It's a war against the forces of entropy, understand? You still don't see it. But you will one day.

—John S.

Story

Demur. Noun; the action or process of objecting to something.

Demur is a sans inspired by social issues and constructivist aesthetics. It was commissioned by the Winnipeg 1919 Workers Collective and expanded its existing logo into a full font.

Demur's condensed proportions and tight spacing pack letters together like a crowd of marching protesters. The modular construction gives the typeface rhythm and commonality, ensuring the glyphs are cut from the same cloth. This is not your typical boring sans serif.

Despite having a generous x-height, this font is best used at medium to large sizes when emphasis is required—like the headlines on a grassroots zine publication. While you can use it however you want, I ask that you avoid using it in anything harmful or hateful towards others.
